STATE, REGIONAL, AND LOCAL COUNCILS

The second semi-annual meeting of the MONTANA COUNCIL was held in Helena on February 3. The president, Dean K. Hoffman, reported that the meeting was especially geared to the state legislative session, and bills which pertained to families were discussed. Approval and dissent of each bill was voted, and the results were conveyed to the legislature both from the Council as a whole and from individual members to each legislator...Low-income programs and Indian families are of great concern to the Council, and a section of the program was devoted to developing insights as to how the group could assist with educational programs for these people. As a start, they are planning a family life conference with Indian and low-income families in September...To assist Council members in becoming informed about encounter groups and sensitivity training for married couples, a discussion on this topic was conducted. It is hoped that programs of this sort will enable members to utilize the meaningful aspects of this technique. ...Dr. Hoffman also reports that the Council is continuing to work with community councils and school districts in various communities in helping them to develop family life and sex education programs in the public schools.

The UPPER PENINSULA, MICHIGAN, COUNCIL in conjunction with the Michigan Society of Gerontology, UPCAP Human Resources Council, Michigan Commission on Aging, and the L-M-N Consortium, sponsored the First Upper Peninsula Regional Conference on Aging at Northern Michigan University on May 13. #### NCFR STAFF

Virginia M. Juffer has joined the NCFR staff this spring as an administrative assistant. Her background is in Home Economics and Sociology. She earned a B.S. in Home Economics Education and M.S. in Home Economics at the University of Minnesota. She completed the requirements for a Ph.D. in Sociology with a Home Economics minor at Iowa State University in March 1969. William F. Kenkel was her major professor at Iowa State, followed by Margaret Warning, when Dr. Kenkel moved to Kentucky. When Dr. Juffer returned to Minnesota to be married, Joan Aldous, Minnesota Family Study Center, provided data and acted as her thesis advisor.

Her initial task with the NCFR is supervising transferring the membership to a computerized operation.

COMPUTERIZATION

We are presently scanning and categorizing the computer forms. In spite of the pretest form on a random cross-section of the membership, we've encountered snags on the subsequent forms and in dovetailing the blanks for "other" information. While the diversity of our membership is wonderful, it does present categorical problems. We do feel well on the way toward directing the machine to do what presently takes many busy fingers! The computer is to aid us in making labels for mailing the journals and Newsletter to you and compiling the membership directory as well as increasing the efficiency of our office.

For those who questioned receiving a second form with the last Newsletter, it was simply less expensive to enclose an additional form for you to fill out if you had not sent the first, than to go through the membership and send forms to those who had not returned them.

Initially, social security numbers were to be used for identification purposes within the NCFR; however, because some members felt they might be misused, they will not be used.

If you have moved since you filled out your form, please write for another. Thank you for your cooperation in returning the forms promptly.

FAMILY GROWERS OF AMERICA

Those of you who read the last newsletter with care detected a new green sprout on the agenda for our October conference--namely the Theme Section. It is my hope that we can address ourselves to conceiving an added dimension in our approaches to marriage and family. Since three days is a short time in which to achieve such fertility, I'm asking for your help at this propitious time of year in realizing such a dream.

Stated positively the theme might read, "Toward the facilitation and enhancement of marital and family interaction." To give you a clearer idea of what this dream stuff might be made of, let me suggest a few questions as potential points of focus to stimulate your own contributions.

For instance, what of the language of relatedness? Are togetherness and companionship enough in today's world? What might marriage be? What about combinations of more than one man and woman in marriage? What words might we garner or coin to describe the quality of ongoing interpersonal experiencing? What is love, fidelity, friendship? How do vital marriages happen? How might we describe loving sexual experiences? How do marriage partners foster mutual disclosure? How do they give meaning to their marriage? How do they remain in touch with the other's personal growth? What would be required of our institutions (rel., educ., gov., ed., mass media, etc.) to enhance marriage and family? What are the implications of these questions for teaching, research, and counseling? In other words, if you had your druthers, how would your marital garden grow?

How shall we deal with these questions? With papers or panels? With workshop discussions growing out of prior preparation of all participants? With guided personal sharing? With all three approaches or more?

To elaborate the dream, printed seeds drawn upon in the section might include Heinlein's Stranger in a Strange Land; Fromm's Revolution of Hope; Huxley's Island; Jourard's Transparent Self; Otto's Ways of Growth; Rimmer's Harrad Experiment and Proposition 31; Goodman's Growing Up Absurd; Foote's articles "Love," "Sex as Play," and "Matching Husbands and Wives in Phases of Development;" Watzlawick's Pragmatics of Human Communication; de Beauvoir's article, "The Question of Fidelity;" Mead's article, "Marriage in Two Steps;" Master's article, "Sex, Ecstasy, and the Psychedelic Drugs;" Lewis', The Four Loves; Maslow's Toward a Psychology of Being; May's Man's Search for Himself; Frankel's The Doctor and the Soul; Garretts' Tantra: The Yoga of Sex; Lederer and Jackson's Mirages of Marriage; Brecher's Analysis of the Human Sexual Response; the issue of Etc. on Semantics and Sexuality; Watt's Nature Man and Woman and his article "The Circle of Sex"; and Neil's Summerhill, to mention a few.

Now that you've got a bit of the flavor of what might be, what are your suggestions? Your response to the questionnaire below will determine the topics and the format of the Theme Section.
