PRESIDENT'S COLUMN

Some goals for the NCFR this year were set forth in an earlier newsletter. It's time to report on the progress made toward reaching them. One has been reached, another has been attained to a significant degree, and efforts have been made toward the accomplishment of the third.

First, the goal of the establishment of an International Section has been reached. Under the able and energetic leadership of Constantina Safilios-Rothschild, the requisite number of names for a petition has been secured and a statement of purpose approved. There are other details to be taken care of, but the International Section is a reality.

Second, the task of involving the NCFR in the public policy area at the national level has been acomplished in significant ways. Some details will be found in Steven Engelberg's Washington Report which follows. As important as the forthcoming White House Conference on Families may be, the establishment of a cooperative relationship with the Family Service Association of America, the American Home Economics Association, and the American Association of Marriage and Family Counselors (Coalition of Family Organizations—COFO) may turn out to be our most significant accomplishment in this area for the year.

Third, with regard to the matter of enlisting minority family field leaders in the membership of the NCFR, we are able to report a considerable amount of letter writing and contacts, along with other efforts such as the encouragement of program leaders to seek out minority speakers and presenters wherever possible. What the outcome will be on this front remains to be seen, but let's hope that we can make increased contact with leaders in the family field from minority groups.

There are other things underway and still much to do in the time that we have remaining in this year. For example, important steps have been taken by the Board of Directors with the establishment of the state chapter arrangement. This promises, as we can see it fully into operation, to strengthen the family life movement not only at the national level but also at the important state level. In order to bring about effective change, it is necessary to devise ways of exercising leverage not only in Washington but also in state capitols and cities across the country. Equally important, for the NCFR to grow and keep pace with the need for leadership in the family life field, it is essential to develop strong state chapters of the organization. Approximately twenty exist at this time and there is the potential for bringing to life another twenty in the near future. More will be forthcoming on this significant matter.

Once again, we extend an invitation to join us for the annual conference in San Diego. I hope that many of you will be able to be present to participate, as well as to tour Tijuana and to plunge into the Pacific. Best wishes for a good summer and fall.

William C. Nichols, President

WASHINGTON COLUMN

On May 20, 1977, representatives of four organizations concerned with family policy—NCFR, the American Association of Marriage and Family Counselors, the American Home Economics Association and Family Service Association of America—met in Washington to discuss the formation of a formal Washington-based coalition. As a result of this meeting, an agreement in principle has been reached to create this coalition (subject to final Board confirmation by several of the organizations).

The first major objective of this new Coalition—which has been named the Coalition of Family Organizations—will be to produce a quarterly Washington newsletter, reporting on significant developments affecting American families at the federal level.

A joint editorial board will be created, consisting of myself and representatives of the other organizations, and the American Home Economics Association has offered to produce the newsletter. The production and mailing costs will be apportioned among each of the organizations based on the number of copies requested by each organization. It is hoped that the first edition of this newsletter will be ready to roll in the Fall of 1977.

In addition to publication of this Washington newsletter, the Coalition will also work cooperatively—in providing technical assistance, in presenting joint Congressional testimony, and in joint advocacy efforts—on issues of common concern to the membership of each organization. For example, we have received requests for technical assistance and political support from several Congressional offices interested in developing legislation dealing with the growing problem of "battered wives"; and we have discussed the possibility of Coalition support for the Administration's hospital cost containment proposal—a proposal which will have an obvious impact on all American families.

This new Coalition is a very important development and I will keep you posted on future developments.

White House Conference on Families

NCFR also has been actively involved with a larger number of national organizations, exploring the creation of a coalition to influence the planning and implementation of the White House Conference on Families, tentatively scheduled for 1979.

After a two day meeting in Washington on May 25-26, 1977, representatives of approximately 15 national organizations (including myself on behalf of NCFR) formally agreed to form such a coalition with two broad objectives:

1. To share and discuss information on developments concerning the White House Conference on Families; and 2. To influence the planning and implementation of the White House Conference.

At the conclusion of this two day meeting, three officers were elected for a brief term to carry out various tasks of this new coalition. The interim chairman was authorized to write to Secretary Califano, informing him of the creation of the coalition, and of the desire of the coalition's representatives to be included in any and all meetings at HEW concerning Conference planning.

The membership in this coalition initially has been limited to those organizations signing the original letter to Secretary Califano. While no organizations will be solicited to join the coalition, requests to join will be considered as they are received.

There is still very little to report concerning the Government's activity in the pre-planning of this Conference. The only significant development since my last Newsletter column has been the decision by Secretary Califano to place the responsibility for the Conference under the jurisdiction of HEW's Office of Human Development, which is headed by Assistant Secretary, Arabella Martinez. There are also reports that either the President or Secretary Califano will issue a formal statement on the Conference some time this summer.

National Health Insurance

At NCFR's Executive Committee Meeting in May we discussed the importance of NCFR being in a position to participate effectively in the debate on national health insurance. Secretary Califano has created an advisory committee on national health insurance to report to him by the end of 1977, and the Administration has indicated that proposed legislation on national health insurance may be ready some time in 1978. In addition, the President's Commission on Mental Health, which is chaired by Mrs. Carter, is expected to develop major recommendations concerning the mental health aspect of any type of national health insurance plan.

Accordingly, NCFR should be in a position, as this debate develops, to recommend family strengthening initiatives for any type of national health insurance proposal. Toward this end, NCFR President Nichols has appointed an ad hoc committee on "Special Mental Health Concerns in National Health Insurance," chaired by Lawrence Gaughan, professor of law at Washington and Lee University, who specializes in health issues. Other committee members are Emily M. Brown, Helen Raschke, Clark E. Vincent, and Gertrude Zemon-Gass.

I will work closely with Professor Gaughan and his committee over the next several months, with the goal of developing an effective NCFR position paper. The committee will focus on such issues as the need for marriage and family therapy, crisis intervention services, and the like.

Once this paper is completed, NCFR should be in a better position—as one of the few national organizations devoted solely to family issues—to influence the debate over national health insurance. NCFR is uniquely able to address itself to a "family impact analysis" of various national health insurance proposals. An effective position paper expressing NCFR's views on this issue could influence the development of the final legislation.

Welfare Reform

One of the twelve basic goals for welfare reform announced by the Carter Administration in May was that "incentives should be designed to keep families together."

The specifics of the Administration's legislative proposal—and particularly the specific proposals to eliminate the obvious discriminations against intact families under the existing welfare system—will be known when the Administration submits its formal proposal to the Congress, which is scheduled for August 1977.

Like national health insurance, the "family impact" of any welfare reform proposal is of major concern to an organization such as NCFR. Accordingly, I have recommended to the Executive Committee that an ad hoc committee—like the one created on national health insurance—should be formed so that NCFR can be in a position to respond effectively to the specifics of the Administration's welfare reform legislation. President's Commission on Mental Health

Shortly after taking office, President Carter announced the creation of a new Commission on Mental Health, chaired by Mrs. Carter. This Commission has been given a very broad mandate, with directions to prepare a comprehensive report to the President on a series of major issues—from the rights of the mentally ill to financing mechanisms for the delivery of mental health services.

In May, I met with Dr. Betty Hamburg, the Commission's Director of Studies, to discuss the work of the Commission and to offer NCFR's assistance in developing the Commission's recommendations. Dr. Hamburg will be responsible for the entire area of family mental health.

I have submitted to Dr. Hamburg a list of names of prominent NCFR members who might be available to serve as members of various task forces which will be created by the Commission over the next several months. In the Fall of 1977, the Commission will make a preliminary report to the President. I intend to follow closely the work of the Commission, and at some point in the near future, the position paper prepared by NCFR's ad hoc Committee on National Health Insurance, if adopted by the Board, will be submitted to the Commission as the NCFR position.

Foster Care, Adopting, and Child Welfare Services

The House recently passed legislation introduced by Representative George Miller, to reform the federal Government's role in foster care, adoption and child welfare services; similar reform proposals are underway in the Senate, under the leadership of Senators Cranston and Moynihan.

On July 12, 1977, Vice President Mondale, on behaf of the Administration, announced the Administration's proposal to deal with these significant problems. In introducing the Administration's proposal, Vice President Mondale stated:

One of President Carter's principle goals is to strengthen, rather than undercut, the family. No area needs this redirection more than the joint federal-state programs which remove children from their families and place them in foster care. Foster care is an important part of our effort to protect children from abuse and neglect, and dedicated foster parents provide priceless love and support to thousands of American children. But too often children are needlessly taken away from their natural families. Too often these children are consigned to large, remote institutions instead of less restrictive forms of placement. Often children are simply swallowed up in the system—not intentionally, but almost mindlessly.

The Vice President pointed out that about 350,000 American children are now living in foster care homes and institutions, and many of these children are now considered hard to adopt, either because they have been separated from their natural families or because they have special medical and emotional problems. The Vice President also stated that studies show that some of these children could be returned to their natural families with a little extra help, and others could be adopted, by willing families, including foster care parents, if only assistance were available for medical and other expenses.

The Vice President then noted that "This Administration believes that no American child should be forgotten or abandoned to an institution when there are families who could provide a permanent home, and that a special effort should be made at both the federal and state level to ensure the right of every child to a loving, stable family," a step which the Vice President pointed out could actually save money for state and federal governments in the long run, as an alternative to the higher cost of institutional care.

Accordingly, the Administration's proposal is in two basic parts. The first part proposes to reform the incentives in the federal foster care system in two basic respects. Under existing law, children in foster care receive federal Medicaid insurance, to pay for serious medical and emotional problems. However, if these children are adopted, they lose the Medicaid assistance, and accordingly, the Administration proposes to amend the law to permit Medicaid benefits to follow the child.

Furthermore, the federal Government now spends approximately 200 million dollars to support 117,000 children in foster care at an average federal cost of nearly $2,000 annually per child. If these children are adopted, they lose eligibility for federal main tenance assistance. The Administration proposes to reform the current system, to help low and moderate income families willing to provide a home for hard to place children, by permitting the use of foster care funds for adoption subsidies. Over the long term, the Administration proposes to place a cap on the federal AFDC Foster Care Program, to provide an incentive to keep children with their natural families, where possible, or to permit adoption where that is the best alternative for the child.

The second major part of the Administration's proposal calls for a substantial expansion of the Federal Child Welfare Services Program, with strong incentives for systematic reform at the state and federal level. Emphasis will be placed on preventive services, so that the children are not removed from the home needlessly, and on reunification services to bring families back together wherever possible. The purpose of this aspect of the proposal "is not simply to encourage adoption, but also to reunite families and to prevent unnesssary placement outside the home." The Administration's proposal also would encourage states to develop better information and tracking systems, to develop and follow individual case plans for every child, and to provide due process protections for the natural families, children and foster care parents.

Under this second part of the Administration's proposal, an additional 209.5 million dollars would be provided by the mid-1980s to expand state child welfare services. The first 63 million dollars would be granted in the next fiscal year, which would provide, among other things, family and marital social services.

According to news reports, Senator Cranston of California (the sponsor of the original Senate bill in this area) plans to introduce new legislation worked out with the White House. With the Administration's backing, Senator Cranston predicts that the revised bill will be enacted this year.

While there remain significant differences between the Administration's proposal and the House-passed version of this legislation, it seems likely that a compromise position will be worked out over the next several months. Such legislation obviously will have a major impact on current adoption and foster care practices now in place in most states.

This is an important proposal on its merits; however, it is also significant in that it is the first concrete legislative proposal by the Carter Administration which has as its explicit underlying purpose strengthening the stability of American families.

I have recommended that NCFR consider formal support of the basic principles contained in both the Administration's proposal and the House-passed measure.

Abortion and Family Planning

Shortly after the U.S. Supreme Court held that the federal government was not compelled to pay for elective abortions under the Medicaid program, HEW announced—in accordance with President Carter's prior opposition to financing abortions under Medicaid, that all funding for Medicaid—financed abortions will terminate as of July 25, 1977. (The House-passed version of the HEW Appropriations bill also contains a provision barring the use of Medicaid funds for abortion.)

As a result of these recent developments, the debate on this issue has intensified. On July 15, 1977, approximately 40 of the Administration's top women officials met to develop a letter to the President, expressing their strong opposition to his position on the use of Medicaid funds to finance abortions. Furthermore, an Ad Hoc Committee for Women's Health and Reproduction (consisting of Planned Parenthood, the National Women's Political Caucus, the American Public Health Association and several other organizations) has been formed to urge the President to reverse his position on this issue.

This Ad Hoc Committee has also urged the President to increase federal support for contraception and family planning services, pregnancy detection, and other related health and research programs. Specifically, the Committee has urged an increase in federal funding from the 225 million dollars budgeted in FY 1978 to 410 million dollars in 1979, 586 million dollars in FY 1980, and 783 million dollars in FY 1981.

While I recognize that there probably is a great deal of controversy within NCFR on both the abortion issue and the related family planning funding question, the NCFR Board should consider at its October meeting whether NCFR wants to take a position on either issue.

HEW Appropriations Bill

As of this writing, the HEW Appropriations Bill is moving toward final passage; it is now in the final stages of the House-Senate Conference. According to news reports, the Conference Committee has reached agreement on a final figure in the range of 60 to 60.2 billion dollars. While the President has threatened to veto any bill in excess of 61.3 billion dollars, it now appears that the final figure will be close enough to the President's request so that a veto will be avoided.

FAMILY ACTION SECTION

The continuously rising number of divorces and the impact on marriage and the family have caused concern among members, who are now inquiring about the possibility of the Family Action Section's establishing an interest group that could pursue the study of this social problem.

Also, the Task Force on Women's Rights and Responsibilities is no longer in existence. Many members have expressed the need to reestablish an avenue of communication for those who are specifically interested in Women's issues. A time can be arranged at the Annual Meeting for members interested in these two social issues to explore the possibilities for the formation of these specific interest groups.

Any members who would like to participate in one or both of these groups should send the following information to me: name, mailing address, identity of group interest, and any comments that would be helpful.

The Family Action Section program for the San Diego meeting promises to be a stimulating experience. Graham Spanier, program chairperson, and I encourage members to consider attending and becoming involved in the Family Action Section.
